For this he is to be admired and commended. It would be well for the country if the sons of our multimillionaires were educated to make great statesmen, or to shine in art, cience or literature, rather than to live fast, to dress well, to figure in "society" of their own calibre and to go idly and uselessly through life.

There is an old Scotch saying,
"They're queer folk in the Shaws," that I think with equal truth could be put.
"There are queer folk in Harlem."
Hardly a day passes in our classic precincts that we do not see some eccentric creature who excites our pity or our risibilities.

A decade ago Harlem was the home of the goose and the goat. Now a goore or a goat is as rare on the streets above One Hundred and Tenth as is a horned deer.

Jewels for Embroidery.

The employment of imitation jewels in connection with embroidery and their use upon fancy knick-knacks is very popular among workers in decorative arts, as they impart to such articles a sparking effect which is very good if carefully managed so as to gream out to expense and in unlooked for lines.

There was a large crescent of soft black coze around the stove, and each person who stepped on the slippery slats made them "squeck, squash" up and down in the slush. I couldn't help gazing at it, and I did so in a sort of speculative horror, wondering how long it had been since a hose and broom had been applied to that "slough of despond." My mind was lifted from its depressing subject by noticing a man who was also looking intently at the inky pool around the stove.

Suddenly he opened a satchel, took out a long glass tube, and began scoeping up some of the slicky compound from between the slats of the floor.
